In 2010, an estimated 50 million people were uninsured in the United States. A portion of the uninsured reflects unemployment rates; however, this rate is primarily a reflection of the fact that when most health plans meet an individual's needs, most times, those health plans are not affordable. Research shows that people without health insurance are more likely to experience financial burdens associated with the utilization of health care services. But even among the insured, underinsurance has emerged as a barrier to care. The Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (ACA) has made the most comprehensive changes to the provision of health insurance since the development of Medicare and Medicaid by requiring all Americans to have health insurance by 2016. An estimated 30 million individuals who would otherwise be uninsured are expected to obtain insurance through the private health insurance market or state expansion of Medicaid programs. The success of the ACA depends on the design of the essential health benefits (EHB) package and its affordability. Essential Health Benefits recommends a process for defining, monitoring, and updating the EHB package. The book is of value to Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation (ASPE) and other U.S. Department of Health and Human Services agencies, state insurance agencies, Congress, state governors, health care providers, and consumer advocates.

Consumers need clear information about the benefits provided by their health insurance plans--what's covered, what isn't covered, and what costs they're responsible for. Yet research has found that consumers have significant difficulty understanding health insurance plans. This has a direct impact on consumers' health: Without a clear understanding of what their insurance covers, consumers are more likely to delay or forgo care, to make uninformed choices about treatment, and to end up with large and unexpected bills. That will change beginning on September 23, 2012, when the Affordable Care Act will, for the first time, give consumers the right to concise, comparable, plain-language descriptions of the benefits and costs under private health insurance plans. This information will be provided in the new Summary of Benefits and Coverage. The Summary of Benefits and Coverage will help the nearly 173.5 million people (65.1 percent of non-elderly Americans) who have private health insurance. It will help them decode the terms and conditions of their coverage and make informed health care decisions, regardless of whether they get their health insurance through a job or purchase coverage in the individual insurance market.
